There is an irreducible informality to Nakamoto Consensus, insofar as it remains open, or unsettled, at multiple levels. If the mining procedure – rather than the reward criterion – could be fully specified in advance, and thus support predictive deductions, it would do no work.

I feel like this is Nick incentivizing me to produce what he has only partially encrypted. 😉 Why has he not explicitly stated the analytic a posteriori? (its actually encrypted in there)

Nick decrypts 25% of Bitcoin-as-Being. Another 25% is decrypted articulating the Analytic Aposteriori.

This completes the Kantian Quadrature.

The other 50% is a future where no distinction between the 4 positions. Laruelle calls this Vision-in-One. It's the accelerative step.

Theory: you only need to know 25%+ε information to solve a quadrature
